

NEWS RELEASE – May 31, 2017

SIPA report details ways Canadians are deceived by financial institutions falsifying documents

TORONTO, Mar 31, 2016 - Small Investor Protection Association (SIPA) publishes another report "Forgery – Falsification of Documents". The report reveals many of the ways financial institutions falsifies documents to facilitate causing harm to Canadians.

The report is timely and consistent with CBC Go Public's program exposing how the investment industry falsifies documents to mislead regulators and facilitate the deception of clients.

CBC Go Public's programs have already increased public awareness as SIPA perceives rising awareness in feedback from the public that the investment industry appears to have lost its moral compass due to an out of control culture of greed that is endangering all Canadians.

SIPA is calling on the Government Canada to interview and listen to victimized private individuals for their testimony and not rely upon reports by industry or regulators that rely upon self-regulation. History shows self-regulation is not effective in providing consumer protection.

This report "Forgery – Falsification of Documents" reveals irrefutable facts to substantiate that this problem is widespread across the financial industry and must be dealt with by our elected officials.

This report is available on the SIPA website at www.sipa.ca.

About SIPA: The Small Investor Protection Association (SIPA) was incorporated (Ontario corporation number 1327366) as a national non-profit organization at the end of January, 1999. SIPA is a voice for small investors and advocates for the interests of investors.

SOURCE: Small Investor Protection Association

For further information: Stan I. Buell, President, Small Investor Protection Association, tel: 614-416-4238, direct: 902-569-4238, sipa.toronto@gmail.com, www.sipa.ca, stanbuell@gmail.com